

◆ECO-EDUCATION TOY

HIPPIE HOUSE

This newest breed of dollhouse not only boasts an eco-friendly manufacturing process—it's made from earth-conscious rubber wood and non-toxic inks—but also has a sneaky way of making playtime educational. Decked out with a vertical wind turbine, solar panel with electrical inverter for generating electricity, a rain barrel and a retracting wind and shade canopy, this two-storey off-the-grid play home makes green living child's play. Eco Dollhouse with furniture (dolls sold separately), $250, Plan Toys.

◆BOOKS

Read Smart

Next time you're looking for reading material for your little future global leader, check out CitizenKid, a collection of books published by Kids Can Press. The collection, aimed at eight- to 12-year-olds, includes award-winning titles about complex topics like biodiversity, microloans, water conservation and the global community, distilled into easy-to-understand concepts with fantastic illustrations. You might also learn a thing or two as you read along. How to Build Your Own Country by Valerie Wyatt, illustrations by Fred Rix, $19. One Hen by Katie Smith Milway, illustrations by Eugenie Fernandes, $20. One Well by Rochelle Strauss, illustrations by Rosemary Woods, $20.

◆SHOPPING

BAGGED!

Take your plastic-free grocery shopping to the next level with these 100 percent cotton mesh produce bags (also available in organic cotton). No more thin plastic bags—which are so hard to re-use—and no more fighting with those rolls while standing over the apples. Gift set of 4, $28, Credobags.

